The waste disposal procedures during the relevant period were as follows:

- a. All reclaimable materials (e.g. telephone wire, lead-sheathed cable, electronic components, steel racks) were shipped via rail to an out-of-state AT&T salvage facility for sale.
- b. Lead-acid batteries were sold to local scrap dealers and later to battery recyclers.
- c. Used motor oil was collected and sold to local reclaimers.
- d. The remaining waste stream, which consisted largely of cardboard, paper and typical office waste, was removed by local trash haulers under contract. It is assumed that this waste was disposed of at local landfills. The contracts were both written and oral, but a diligent search has failed to locate copies of any written contracts for the period 1951-1981.
